RESIDENTIAL CARE VS LIVE-IN CARE

Studies show that people often feel lonelier in care homes. Live-in care reduces the risk of isolation, emphasising the importance of attention and quality time with loved ones in overcoming elderly loneliness.

Residential Care

Up to £55,000 per year, per single room. Very expensive for couples wishing to remain together

Having to face the heart-breaking reality of parting ways with beloved pets.

The transition to a single-room living arrangement is a significant adjustment.

Often leaving a spouse behind due to different care needs.

Limited family visiting hours and an increased sense of isolation and loneliness, especially among patients with dementia.

Potential for low standards and sub-quality care with limited access to comprehensive medical care.

Live-in care

The cost of live-in care starts at £1465 per week for one person.

With live-in care, the companionship of pets is preserved, providing emotional comfort and well-being.

Retain the comfort and warmth of remaining in the familiar home environment.

Couples can continue to enjoy each other's company and maintain the bond they share.

Unrestricted family time - seeing friends and family in a relaxed and familiar environment for everyone.

One-to-one care and support. Plus Keep their regular GP and receive all necessary medical care.

Better at home

With live-in care, your loved ones are less likely to fall and encounter unfortunate accidents than people in residential and nursing homes. Remaining at home ensures a safer and more secure environment for your loved one, guaranteeing peace of mind.

TRANSPARENT COSTS FOR PEACE OF MIND

Understanding the financial aspects of care is crucial, and at MUVE Homecare, we believe in transparency every step of the way. Unlike some care options that may seem dauntingly expensive, live-in care is designed to offer flexibility and choice, aligning with your preferences and needs.

Residential care often comes with hefty costs, and the decision to move into such facilities is usually irreversible. The financial implications of residential care demand careful thought.

Home care provides a more adaptable approach. You have the liberty to determine the level of care and support you require, and importantly, for as long as you need it.

With home care, you only pay for the personalised, one-to-one care you receive, avoiding the broader costs associated with care homes that distribute expenses across multiple individuals.

In certain situations, funding for care may be available either in full or in part through local authorities. The Money Advice Service is an excellent resource for obtaining more information about care funding and financial assistance options. For more information visit www.moneyhelper.org.uk
